'Living life in its fullness' at Nutgrove

Year 2 during our Geography lesson this week have been learning about coastlines we were investigating how an environment might change overtime. We conducted a practical activity using sand, small buildings and water to learn about the permanent effects of coastal erosion, the damage it can cause to our coastline and how it can be stopped. The children loved watching the demonstration and sharing their thoughts and ideas.

We are delighted with the models that the children have been bringing in from home. Stonehenge and volcanoes are now taking pride of place in our classroom. Olivia M and Matthew even made their volcanoes erupt!!!
